Not illustrated. 1893 Excerpt: . . . intermediate school, and a lower--the master workmens school. The technical intermediate school (Die Technische Mittelschule) has a preparatory course and two special courses of instruction, each lasting one year. The master workmens school has three courses of study, each of five months duration. The winter session begins on the 1st day of November and continues till the end of March; the summer semester begins on the 1st day of May and lasts until the end of September. Admission to either of these schools is by examination. The tuition fee for each course (semester) is 75 marks (17. 85). In the preparatory classes are taught German, arithmetic, geography, geometrical drawing, and technical free-hand drawing, etc. ; in the higher classes, mathematics, mechanics, physics, chemistry, geometry, machine construction, theory of steam and hydraulic motors, electrotechnics, etc. One division of the Fachschule is a school of industrial art (Kunstgewerbeschule). It was organized in the year 1879. The establishment includes a school of decorative painting, a school of cabinetmaking, a school of ornamentation and modelling, and a school of metal work. This department, also, is under the control of the same director--Herr Romberg. The terms of instruction begin and end on the same days with those of the master workmens school before reported. The tuition fee is the same in amount--75 marks (17. 85) for each course. There are no statistics available respecting these several departments except such as we have cited. The master workmens school--the most recently established of...
