Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Anatomical Record, Vol. 8 On February 20, 1913, the body of a white, male infant, aged one day, of average size and weight reached the anatomical rooms of the Yale Medical School. On inspection the body appeared to be well developed and normal, save for an odd-appearing deformity of both upper extremities. At autopsy the pleural cavities were found to contain a considerable amount of blood, doubtless the result of a birth injury. Upon examination of the deformed upper extremities, it was found impossible to pronate or supinate the antebrachium and hand, save for a slight alteration in position allowed by turning the humerus and ulna on their vertical axes. The hands were fixed in marked adduction; the right one making a right angle and the left one considerably less than a right angle with the antebrachium. Both hands were rotated on the ulnae so that their dorsa presented ventrad, that is, they were fixed in pronation and abutted the ulnae at their medial aspects (figs. 1 and 5). The position of the hands indicated lack of radial support. Careful examination failed to reveal any trace of a radius in either arm. A Provisional diagnosis of complete absence of both radii was made. This was later confirmed by Rontgen rays and by dissection (figs. 2 and 5). The ulnae seemed normal in position and size. However, due to the faulty position of the hands, the distal extremities of the ulnae formed very prominent subcutaneous points at the wrists (figs. 1 and 2).
