For whyle that frute may last, his ty me is neuer past. Various have been the conjectures on the subject of this poem; and there is much probability of its original derivation remaining still undiscovered. Warton suspected the whole poem to be a translation from the French or Latin . Again, it has been considered to be founded on the craft of Hunting set forth by Mayster John Gyffard and Willm Twety, who were in attendance on King Edward the lid. This treatise, attributed to Gyfford and Twety, is preserved among the MSS. of the Cottonian library. From the unusual similarity between the two, both conjectures may...
